SCOUTING REPORT

Emerging elite point guard who can play at the off guard as well but running point is his best position because of a good balance between facilitating and scoring. Has a lot of game in his hands, both as a scorer and passer ... slithery, shifty, and ultra-confident creating off-the-bounce ... has nice range on his shot ... excellent touch ... can go both ways and finish with both hands with ease ... willing passer who mixes scoring and passing well going off good reads ... makes difficult shots ... puts a lot of pressure on defence ... goes to the free throw line often and converts at a very high rate, making key clutch free throws ... gambles well defensively and comes up with steals ... looks to rebound ... not afraid to sacrificing body on hustle plays.

Mathias has the potential to build up a good pro body as his frame can fill ... nice first quick step ... gets off the floor well enough ... has good lateral speed to play defence.

Look for Mathias to be an NBA point guard once he becomes consistent in his effort to be dangerous on every possession and NBA fit with added strength, athleticism and stamina. Has an enormous potential to make things happen on the floor and positively impact the team he is on - not just because of his scoring talent, but also because he will make the good pass to the open man without hesitation. He is an altruist player.

Has made a very interesting effort in cutting his turnovers per game down since the '23 U19 FIBA World cup. At the Toronto Global Jam he averaged less than three turnovers per game and had a positive assist to turn over ratio in a better and tougher competition. Has continued to mature in the NJCAA KJCCC, probably the best JUCO conference in America.

He is a diamond with overall great natural abilities and an uncommon desire to improve and succeed. All the tools are in place for him to become an elite next level player. Works well and displays good personality and a strong character. Is a quite leader and a good teammate. Intelligent ... coachable ... understands systems ... Keeps himself out-of-troubles off the court.
